Anthrax Vaccine Immunization Program update

By Col. Philip La Kier
99th Medical Group
commander

An anthrax shipping limitation has temporarily interrupted the Anthrax Vaccine Immunization Program here. Starting July 11, priority will be given to those deploying to the Southwest Asia and Korea.

Significant efforts are being made to balance all military branch service needs with the available vaccine and the manufacturer's ability to ship the vaccine. Team Nellis apologizes for any inconvenience this may cause.

The AVIP is a three-phase program to immunize the military population against the threat of weaponized anthrax. This Department of Defense mandatory program, initiated in 1998, is currently still operating in Phase I. This phase includes vaccinating forces now assigned or rotating to high threat areas in Southwest Asia or the Korean Peninsula. Dates for implementing Phases II and III have not yet been received and will eventually include immunization of the entire military force. Ideally, deploying personnel will initiate the series prior to leaving the United States.

Those who have initiated the series will not have to start over if stock levels do not permit continuing the series as scheduled. The immunization series is restarted only if a single dose has been administered and more than two years have elapsed.

The Public Health Flight will forward monthly squadron rosters of personnel requiring mobility immunizations to squadron commanders and unit deployment monitors. This listing helps promote maximum medical readiness by ensuring people who require mandatory deployment immunizations receive them. This listing includes all mobility shots, including anthrax.

It is extremely important to keep all other mobility immunizations current to enhance our readiness stance.

People on the squadron listing requiring mobility immunizations other than anthrax should report as soon as possible, with their shot records, to the Immunization Clinic at the Mike O'Callaghan Federal Hospital between 7:30 a.m. and 4 p.m. Team Nellis appreciates your support.

Please direct any questions or concerns to the Public Health Flight at 653-3351.

Being a part of the best Air Force in the world

By Col. Ricardo Cazessus Range Management Office commander

Everyday we open a newspaper, turn on a news program or wander around the Web, we in the Air Force are faced with the fact that we live and work in a military service that is undergoing major upheaval.

Many of the challenges we face are external to the Air Force—the on rush of technology, the globalization of the world's economy and the rise of terrorist groups—these factors have had an enormous impact on how we as a public and a government perceive America's role in the world.

Other factors are internal, or arguably, our reaction to those external trends: the imperative to modernize, leverage the revolution in military affairs, and cope with shrinking manpower levels and budgets aggravated by expanding responsibilities. All force us to do more with less, a phrase that makes us collectively wince.

Do you find yourself asking; "What am I still doing in the Air Force? Can my unit hack its mission? What are our leaders doing to work these issues?"

I would argue that the antidote for the doom and gloom, we in the Air Force are bombarded with each day is vision. By that I mean a sense of perspective of who you are as a military force, the part you play on Team Nellis and perhaps most importantly, who you are as an individual airman and team member. About 3,000 years ago a very sharp leader by the name of Solomon wrote, "Where there is no vision my people perish," Proverbs 29:18.

Giving yourself credit

Whether you give yourself credit or not, you are part of the greatest Air Force and arguably the most potent military force that has ever taken the field. Need recent proof? Look at Operation Allied Force.

NATO prevailed despite bad weather, incredible political constraints and a large-scale humanitarian crisis that upped the conflict's difficulty factor, off the charts.

Despite these constraints, the team led by then United States Air Forces in Europe Commander, Gen. John Jumper and Lt. Gen. Michael Short, joint and combined force air component commander, racked up a box score of more than 14,000 strike and 24,000 support sorties with not a single loss of a NATO crewmember. We also dropped over 23,000 bombs with less than 20 incidents of collateral damage.

Army Gen. Wesley Clark, the overall allied commander, testified to Congress, "There's never been anything like it in the history of a military campaign...it's a real tribute to the skill and proficiency of the men and women who flew and executed this campaign, to achieve that kind of precision."

Where do you fit into the team

Fast forward to today. Let's talk about where you fit in as a team member and airman. The Nellis/Nevada Test and Training Range combo has been called the Air Force's "Hope Diamond." Rightly so, as Nellis is the home to Red Flag, the Weapons School, Air Warrior, Joint Expeditionary Force Experiment, Security Forces Ground Combat Training Flight, Thunderbirds and the 53rd Test and Evaluation Group. In short, Nellis has every high-end training exercise, course, and operational test the Air Force has on the books.

We're not short on operational forces either. Watch the 99th Air Base Wing at Camp Cobra; RED HORSE packing up for Grenada, or the Predator squadrons and the rescue squadron in action.

Somewhere in this long list of best, biggest, unique, one-of-kind units you fit in. From my perspective during my tour as a 57th Wing vice commander and now as a supporting commander in the RMO, there's a lot to be proud of as a member of Team Nellis.

The right tool for the job

The other half of the vision thing is what are our leaders doing to give us the necessary tools to do our job and take care of the individual airman and his or her family? Here again, things are headed in the right direction. Let me offer some mission oriented examples.

Last spring, members of Congress held meetings in our Officers' Club to hear from the Air Warfare Center commander and the commanders of the Naval Strike Warfare Center and National Training Center regarding readiness issues and the need for investment on our ranges.

As a direct result, Congress added $10.7 million to the Air Force budget to fund investments on the NTTR to support F-22 testing and incorporate both the F-117 and B-2s, and ensure advanced weaponry in Red Flag exercises.

Having a high fidelity test and training battlespace is one thing, but our operational tempo is quite another. The Air Force Secretary Mr. F. Whitten Peters agrees.

"Improving our tempo is something we cannot compromise. We will never fix our retention rates unless we can guarantee people that in peacetime they will have a personal life."

Definitely not a cure all, but his go ahead on the Air Expeditionary Force concept is an important first step. Some of the pluses: the AEF levels the burden across the active duty commands, the Guard and Reserve are stepping up to ten percent of the manpower bill, and support units will be tasked as teams.

But wait there's more. Tour length will come back down to 90 days and AEF wings will see plus-ups in home station support manpower to offset the burden of those folks deployed.

The final component

The final Air Force component in the vision equation is the pay package. Again, things are beginning to look up and the leadership is paying very close attention to what you're saying, using not only

New will not be 33rd Fighter Wing commander

LANGLEY AIR FORCE BASE, Va. – Colonel Larry D. New, tapped to be the next boss of the 33rd Fighter Wing at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., will not take command of the unit after all. He was slated to take charge in April 2001.

In September 1998, Col. New was the 57th Operations Group commander at Nellis, when two helicopters assigned to his unit crashed killing all 12 people aboard. The Accident Investigation Board concluded Col. New failed to mitigate known safety hazards in the mishap unit prior to the accident. A recent independent review, commissioned by the Air Combat Command commander, Gen. John Jumper, examined what actions New took as the 57th OG commander prior to the mishap. The AIB report was reviewed and witnesses were interviewed.

In making his decision about Col. New's assignment, Gen. Jumper put the interests of the 33rd FW first. "My first obligation is to the 33rd Fighter Wing, its people and its mission," said Gen. Jumper. "While Col. New's career-long record of performance demonstrates he is a highly capable officer, his association with this accident, and the continuing news media scrutiny it draws, will detract from his ability to effectively lead the wing. I owe it to the men and women of the 33rd to give them a commander who can focus exclusively on them and their mission."

The review also ascertained selection criteria used by the Air Force 1999 Command Selection Board. Boards base selections on review of career-spanning performance reports. Generally not available to them is information such as accident investigation results, or any surrounding controversy, such as in Col. New's case.

No one has been nominated to replace Col. New as the next commander of the 33rd.

informal feedback, but also major efforts such as the recently completed Chief of Staff of the Air Force survey.

In September Gen. Michael Ryan reiterated his commitment to you: "Those who serve deserve to share in a meaningful way the prosperity they protect."

Congress listened and granted you a 4.8 percent pay increase (largest in 18 years), set future pay raises at half a percent above the rate dictated by the Employment Cost Index and is reinstating the 20 year retirement. One-plus-one dorms, fully implementing quality TRICARE, housing allowance reform are among many issues still need to be worked. However, the constant in all these examples is that the Air Force leadership is fully engaged on each and every topic.

Back to my original thought. Is service in the Air Force today worth it given the turmoil we live and work in each and everyday?

If you take a bit of time to think for yourself, research the issues and look at your day to day life as an airman, member of a team, and your place in something bigger than just taking a paycheck home every two weeks.

I believe that you'll come to the same conclusion that I have—there's no better way to serve your country and have a real impact on others.

Life in the Air Force is not perfect, but look at things with a longer perspective, a touch of vision.

We are on a decided upswing—maintaining our mission edge while also seeing an improvement in our operations tempo and quality of life. One last thought, remember we live in a democracy, and by design, change comes slowly, but next time you're bending wrenches on the ramp in the middle of July or diving for your mask during an "alarm red," remember why you signed on in the first place and what it means to be an airman in today's Air Force.

Controlling pets in base housing

To make a long story short, a cat got under the hood of my truck and when my wife started the truck to go to work she heard a loud bang, and then the power steering quit working.

My wife opened the hood and found gray cat hair all over the inside of the engine compartment and the fan belt had been stripped off the engine. Luckily the cat survived.

This episode, including labor, replacement parts (the cat was not considered factory installed equipment under the bumper warranty) and my wife losing a day of work, cost us more than $140. If I did not have towing insurance it would have been over $200.

Thank you for your call and the chance to address pet owner responsibility. Pet ownership means an individual has a responsibility for their pets actions as well as the care of the pet. Pets should be in a fenced yard (not tied up), inside the home, or on a leash. When a pet roams freely, there is not only the risk it won't come home but, as in this case, the pet may be harmed or harm someone else. The pet owner is financially liable for the actions of the pet. More importantly, choosing to have a pet brings with it certain responsibilities for its care.

Residents finding stray animals should call Clark County Animal Control at 455-7710. If you know the owner of the animal, you can call the law enforcement desk at 652-2311. After security police have investigated a pet violation, a copy of the report is given to the housing management office and a write-up is issued. Two write-ups for pet violations is cause for eviction from government family quarters.

If you have further questions or concerns, please call the housing office, at 652-9222.

Squeakers and blowouts highlight intramural softball games

By Staff Sgt. Benny Colley
99th Services Squadron

The intramural softball league resumed Monday night with a full slate of games, and what games they turned out to be.

The 66th Rescue Squadron and 547th Intelligence Squadron started things off in a big way with a great game that had grand slam home runs, strikeouts and one team's remarkable come-from-behind win.

66th RQS used four extra base hits to score two runs in the top of the 1st, with 547th IS coming back with four runs in the bottom of the 1st. 547th IS scored three more in the 2nd inning to take a 7-2 lead. A teeter-totter effect occurred having the 66th RQS coming back with two more runs in the 3rd inning and six runs in the 4th to re-take the lead 10-7. The 66th RQS then scored four runs in the 5th inning to take an 11-10 lead, and scored six more runs to take a 16-11 lead going into the bottom of the 6th inning. 547th IS then scored six runs in that last inning to win the game in dramatic fashion, 17-16!

In other games, the Army team held off the hard-charging Ground Combat Training Forces Squadron 11-9. Falcon scored seven runs in their final at-bat, but fell just short of Viper, losing 15-14. Equipment Maintenance Squadron #3 scored early and often downing the 15th Reconnaissance Squadron 13-10, 99th Medical Group #1 bombed EMS #2 20-0, and Viper won its second game of the night in a big way over 99th MDG #2 26-5.

Intramural softball league continues each evening on fields 6 and 7 at Freedom Park.

The birth of airpower

By Airman 1st Class Michaelle Corlett
99th Mission Support Squadron

Airpower is what we represent and who we are in the Air Force. The first aero squadron consisted of 12 officers and 54 enlisted men. World War I broke out in Europe and by October 1914 the numbers increased to 16 officers and 74 enlisted men. The war in Europe began calling quite a bit of attention to aviation.

In March 1916 an urgent “deficiency act” provided 5 million for aviation. By August Congress had appropriated more than 13 million for aeronautics. People were starting to get their first taste of airpower. The same year Congress passed the National Defense Act increasing the number of personnel authorized in the aviation section. The president now had the power to establish an enlisted strength. Men began to train under the aviation section.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt acknowledged the growing importance of airpower. Realizing that the United States could be drawn into the European war in the fight against Nazi forces he confidently stated that airpower could win. It did.

The Air Force Ball will be held Saturday, Sept. 16 at the MGM Grand. Come celebrate the birth of airpower! Social hour starts at 6 p.m. with dinner at 7 p.m.
